

Public Opinion on Legitimacy of UN Sanctions

NIGERIA REPORT (ENGLISH)

- Findings from Nigeria depict strong support for United Nation (UN) sanctions or punishment against a country as portrayed in the six issues measured. Nonetheless, minority of the respondents opposed it. This is also the case of Kenya representing East Africa region where majority supported UN's sanctions on the six parameters evaluated.
- The reversed is the case for South Africa particularly on issues that have to do with sanctions on carrying out an unprovoked military attack on another country, engages in genocide or systematic killing of any group in its own country and provides financial support to terrorist groups. Over half of the respondents opposed sanctions on these issues. The recent genocide incidence in South Africa may have accounted for their reactions because they may be alleging fear that UN will impose sanction on them for the criminal act.
- Specifically for Nigeria, 72% supported UN sanctions on carrying out unprovoked military attack on other countries while 27% opposed it. In terms of engaging in genocide or systematic killing of any group in its own country, 69% favoured the sanctions while 30% kicked against it. 70% were positively disposed to UN sanctions on violating its nuclear non-proliferation treaty obligation or prevents nuclear arms inspection and 28% opposed it.
- In like manner, 59% supported sanction on a country providing financial support to terrorist groups and 35% opposed it. Sanction on removing a democratically elected government was supported by 68% and 30% disapproved it. Similarly, 74% supported sanction on violating treaties on environmental protection while 24% kicked against it.
