35% Believe That Nowadays Men Also Suffer From Domestic Violence Just The Way Women Do

Islamabad, June 29, 2010

According to a Gilani Research Foundation survey carried out by Gallup Pakistan, more than one third (35%) of all Pakistanis are of the opinion that men also experience domestic violence nowadays as the women do while 63% believe it is not so. 2% say they don't know.

It is conceivable that many respondents interpret the word 'Domestic Violence' in a broader sense which includes physical and mental torture. Moreover some respondents, both Men and Women, are likely to answer the question in a lighter vein. Nevertheless such responses are indicative of social trends, especially when findings are compared with findings of exactly the same question repeated in a future survey after a few years.

A nationally representative sample of men and women from across the country were asked the following question: "Some people believe that these days men also suffer from domestic violence just the way women do while others believe that such phenomenon does not take exist. What is your opinion?" Thirty five percent (35%) stated that these days men also go through domestic violence just the way women do as opposed to 63% who believed that this is not true. 2% were uncertain as they said they don't know.

The findings of the survey reveal no significant difference in opinion of people from across various demographics apart from that proportionately a higher percentage of men (40%) assumed that men also go through domestic violence these days, than women (30%).

"Some people believe that these days men also suffer from domestic violence just the way women do while others believe that such phenomenon does not take exist. What is your opinion? "
