Islamabad - August 24, 2016

71% believe polio drops to be very important, 4% not important at all.

According to a Gilani Research Foundation Survey carried out by Gallup Pakistan, 71% Pakistanis believe the administration of polio vaccine to children to be very important, while 4% believe that it is not important at all.

A nationally representative sample of men and women from across the four provinces was asked, "In your opinion, how important is it for children to drink polio drops? Is it very important, somewhat important, or not important at all?" In response to this question, 71% said that it was very important, 24% said that it was somewhat important, while 4% said that it was not important at all. 1% did not know or did not wish to respond. It is important to note that 4% of adult Pakistanis add up to around 4 million men and women.

According to an urban/rural breakdown, less people in urban areas give importance to the polio vaccine than rural areas. 73% rural dwellers and 67% urban dwellers believe that it is very important for children to drink polio drops leading to a gap of 6%.

This question has also been asked in previous years. We see that in 2002 87% Pakistanis believed that it is very important for children to drink polio drops. But since then, the number has been reduced by more than 10% to 74% in 2014, and 71% in 2015/16. This is consistent with the recent increase in polio cases that have cropped up across the nation. We also see that the percentages of 2015 and 2016 are the same, which shows how little progress the government has made in creating awareness for the polio vaccine.
