Islamabad, January 3, 2017

According to a Gallup Pakistan National Survey conducted in the year 1989 (27 years ago) respondents were asked, “If in your area someone leaves their house locked and goes somewhere, what are the chances of robbery taking place in that house?” To this, 25% said very much, 34% said somewhat, while 34% said not at all. 7% did not know or did not wish to respond.

Comparative Picture: The question was asked again in 2016 to enable a concrete comparison. In 2016, 20% said very much, 50% said somewhat, while 30% said not at all.

According to public opinion, there has been a 5% decrease in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe there is a high probability of robbery taking place in a locked house, a 16% increase in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe there is some probability of robbery taking place in a locked house and a 4% decrease in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe there is no probability of robbery taking place in a locked house.

This press release has been made as part of the Gallup Pakistan History Project which aims to release historical empirical polling data to wider audiences. The objective is to sustain and encourage empirical decision making in Pakistan.

Question: “If in your area someone leaves their house locked and goes somewhere, what are the chances of robbery taking place in that house?”
