Islamabad, June 22, 2017

According to a Gallup & Gilani Pakistan National Survey conducted in the year 1991 (25 years ago) respondents were asked, "In your view if a person leaves his house locked and goes away for a few days, what is the chance that an untoward incident would occur?" In response to this question, 30% said that there was a high chance of an untoward incident occurring, 37% said there was some chance, while 17% said that there was no chance. 16% did not wish to respond.

Comparative Picture: The question was asked again in 2016 to enable a concrete comparison. In 2016, 20% said there was a high chance of an untoward incident occurring, 50% said there was some chance, while 30% said that there was no chance.

The findings are available since 1991 periodically and the graph below shows how the figures have fluctuated over the years.

According to public opinion, there has been a 10% decrease in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe that there is a high chance of an untoward occurring, a 13% increase in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe there is some chance and a 13% increase in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe there is no chance.

This press release has been made as part of the Gallup Pakistan History Project which aims to release historical empirical polling data to wider audiences. The objective is to sustain and encourage empirical decision making in Pakistan.

Question: "In your view if a person leaves his house locked and goes away for a few days, what is the chance that an untoward incident would occur?"
