Executive Summary

Islamabad, Lahore, Karachi: Gallup Pakistan has released a report 'Gallup Pakistan Political Weather Report – June 2022 Edition. The report was compiled by asking over 1234 Households (18+ males and females) and national cross-section, covering both urban and rural areas, large Cities (over 2 million), medium Cities (over half million) and towns (population 5000 plus). The data was collected through Random Digit Dialing. Gallup Pakistan has been doing regular polls for over 4 decades in Pakistan and has interviewed around 4 million Pakistanis in the past 40 years.

The report's salient findings are as follows:

Section 1: Election timings

Overwhelming majority of Pakistanis (76%) favor early elections while only a quarter (24%) think the elections should be held in 2023, as per schedule. Between early April 2022 to the current wave, there has been 7% increase the proportion of Pakistanis who are in favor of early elections.

Section 2: Imran Khan's recent long march towards Islamabad and the citizens perception and outcome

41% Pakistanis considered the recent long march by Imran Khan to Islamabad successful, while 28% of the people think the march was unsuccessful.

An overwhelming majority of Pakistanis (78%) are of the view that instead of protesting in the streets, Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf should instead sit down for a discussion with political opponents to reach a settlement whereas 22% oppose to the idea of discussion and are in favor of street protests.

52% Pakistanis optimistic that the situation of the country will improve in the next 6 months; 47% remain doubtful.

Section 3: The move to oust Imran Khan's government was due to a foreign conspiracy or rising inflation.

Public opinion split over the issue; 48% Pakistanis think Imran Khan was ousted because of his government's inability to control inflation while 46% think the removal was because of foreign conspiracy. Between early April 2022 to mid-June 2022, the proportion of Pakistanis who believe Imran Khan was ousted because of inflation has declined by 16%, whereas there has been a 10% increase in the proportion of Pakistanis who believe this is a result of a foreign conspiracy.

Section 4: Opinion regarding the no-confidence motion against Prime Minister Imran Khan

61% Pakistanis showed anger towards the no-confidence motion against Prime Minister Imran Khan and his removal from the PM office while 39% were happy with the decision. The proportion of Pakistanis who are happy with the removal of Imran Khan has declined by 18% between early April (10-11) and the current wave.

Section 5: Views about the family member employment overseas

9% respondents claim to have family members working overseas. Of the 9% working overseas, 43% claim their family workers reside in Dubai, a third claim to be working in Saudi Arabia.

Section 6: Is there anyone unemployed in your family

6 in 10 Pakistanis claim that a family member is currently unemployed.

Section 7: Perception about the politics

An absolute majority of Pakistanis (98%) think that hatred and intolerance in the society is politically motivated and should be addressed on an urgent basis.

81% of Pakistanis claim their family members support the same political party as them.

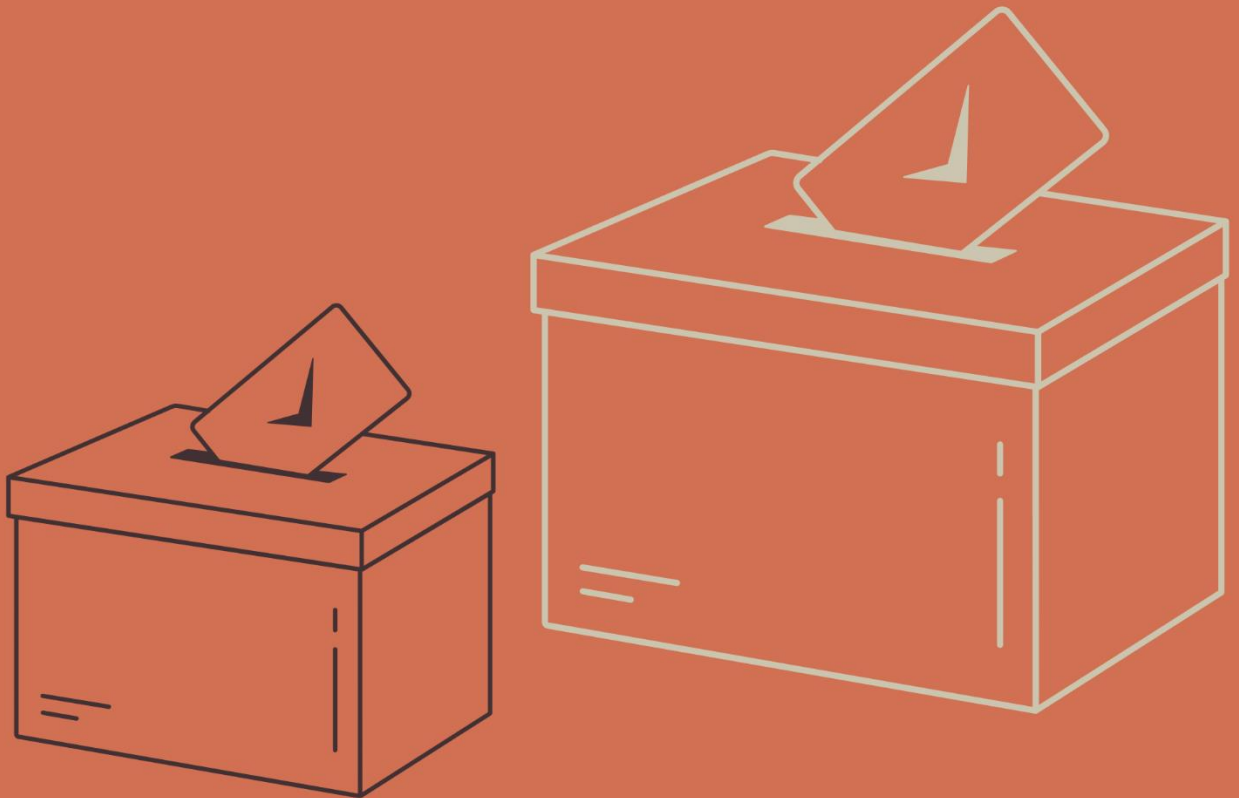

61% of Pakistanis are against dynastic politics and believe that party workers have more right to lead the party.

More than 9 in 10 Pakistanis believe that the party they support is far better than all other political parties.

3 in 4 Pakistanis believe that the party they support is not so good, but other parties are worse.

Note on Sample Size

The sample size used in this survey is quite adequate even in comparison to international standards. Gallup US Daily poll is 500 and the Gallup Poll Social Series is 1000, both having track record of reliable predictability for USA (a country nearly 100 million larger in population of Pakistan). According to Five Thirty-Eight, one of the most credible sources on polling in the US: "Surveying 2,000 voters substantially reduces error compared with surveying 400 of them but surveying 10,000 voters will produce only marginal improvements in accuracy compared with the 2,000- person survey".

Obviously, choosing a higher confidence interval will give greater accuracy to the survey results, however, as the chart below shows, at a certain point the benefits of conducting more surveys begins to tail off:

25 interviews have a confidence interval of 19.6 and 100 interviews has a confidence interval of 9.8, whilst it falls to 4.4 at 500 interviews and 3.1 at 1000 interviews. However, a further 1000 interviews only lower the confidence interval by 0.9 to 2.2. A confidence interval of 1 (not shown on the graph) would require a massive 9604 interviews.

Is a larger sample always better than a smaller sample?

Larger samples are generally more precise, but sometimes not. The important rule in sampling is not how many poll respondents are selected but, instead, how they are selected. A reliable sample selects poll respondents randomly or in a manner which ensures that everyone in the area being surveyed has a known chance of being selected.

How do you interpret Error Margins?

How do you interpret a margin of error? Suppose you know that 51% of people sampled say that they plan to vote for Mr. X in the upcoming election. Now, projecting these results to the whole voting population, you would have to add and subtract the margin of error and give a range of possible results in order to have sufficient confidence that you're bridging the gap between your sample and the population. Supposing a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points, you would be pretty confident that between 48% ($= 51\% - 3\%$) and 54% ($= 51\% + 3\%$) of the population will vote for Mr. X in the election, based on the sample results. In this case, Mr. X may get slightly more or slightly less than the majority of votes and could either win or lose the election. This has become a familiar situation in recent years when the media want to report results on Election Night, but based on early exit polling results, the election is "too close to call."

What Error Margins do not mean

The margin of error measures accuracy; it does not measure the amount of bias that may be present. Results that look numerically scientific and precise don't mean anything if they were collected in a biased way
